

Rest in Peace

You could've called, you know, before it got too late
You could've waited 'til you heard what I had to say
I'm one of the few who's not afraid of you
And I don't know much, but some things I do

Like little things make a difference sometimes
It's the little things that save us, not miracles
We could've called them miracles together
We could've been each other's heroes

Well you can't hide anymore, but I sure hope
That you found your peace somewhere
I never really believed in heaven, but now I know
There must be a place for you
So, rest in peace my friend, rest in peace my friend

I used to love the times you called me late at night
It's like you knew somehow, I'd be lying still awake
I should've told you the trouble I was in How I felt so lost, how scared I was

The place I used to live in is no longer there
But it's okay 'cause things change for the better or worse
I'm not ashamed that eventually we drifted apart
We didn't need to explain, it's just how it went

But I can't tell you anymore that my new place has a shitty view like before
And I'm still staring in the mirror from time to time for reasons to hate myself
You'd laugh at me and say, "I guess some things don't change"

I wonder sometimes if you would've picked up
If I had called you at the perfect timing that night
Clueless to what you are going through
You'd hate to see me regret these things, so I won't
But I wish I knew what went through your mind
Before you closed your eyes and kissed the world goodbye

'Cause I can't tell you anymore that my new place has shitty view like before
And I'm still staring in the mirror from time to time for reasons to hate myself
Rest in peace my friend, rest in peace my friend
Maybe someday I'll sing that song you told me to sing

Rest in peace my friend, rest in peace my friend
